BRAND STORY

Who Uriel is

Uriel is a data engineering and AI solopreneur. He leads and coordinates data projects end to end, conception to deploy: designing pipelines, tuning databases, delivering analytics.

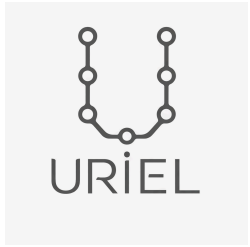

Alongside client work, he writes about data, tech, AI, and project management on Medium and Substack, sharing real decisions and real numbers rather than theory.

The visual identity reflects that: monochromatic, technical, no decoration. What you see is what the work looks like.

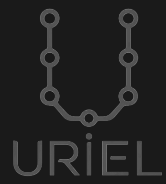

PROFILE	SERVES	ALSO RUNS

VOICE & TONE

How the brand talks

Direct | Personal | Narrative | Technical but human | No hedging

DO

"I migrated the pipeline off Fabric because latency was killing the client's dashboards. Three weeks, no rollback."

DON'T

"Leveraging cutting-edge synergies, we disrupted the data pipeline landscape."

DO

"Here's the query that cut the report from 40 seconds to 2."

DON'T

"It's worth noting that, in conclusion, performance was impactfully improved."

DO

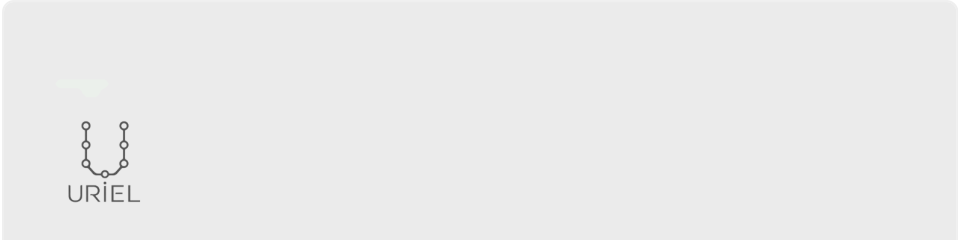

Short paragraphs. First person. Real numbers, real projects, problem → solution.

DON'T

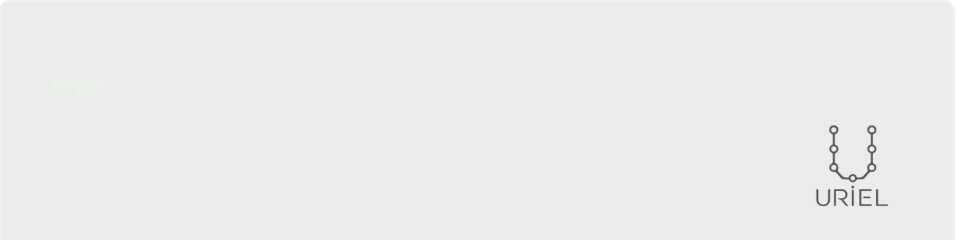

Em dashes, emojis, guru jargon, soft vague conclusions.

APPLICATIONS

GAPS

What's still missing

01 No photography or imagery style defined yet beyond the logo assets — add real work photos or screenshots when available.

02 Font files (Fraunces, Inter, JetBrains Mono) are not stored locally in the identity folder — this book uses the Google Fonts web versions as a stand-in.

03 No published content samples found in output/marketing/ yet — once carousels or thumbnails exist, add them to the Applications page.

04 No icon-only / favicon variant of the mark exists yet, separate from the full wordmark lockup.
